

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I had the inestimable good fortune to come under the personal supervision of three inspiring professors. First of all I would like to express my deepest gratitude to Wolfgang U. Dressler (University of Vienna) for his support of Lithuanian research and contributing challenges, discussions, references and detailed comments on an earlier version of this book.

I would like also to thank my first teacher in child language research Magdalena Smoczyńska (Jagellonian University in Craców), who has initiated Lithuanian data collection and spent an enormous amount of time teaching me from the very first steps of data analysis onwards; and Bonifacas Stundžia (Vilnius University), who was the supervisor of my PhD thesis and gave me useful information on Lithuanian linguistics in general. There is much in this book that I first learned from them, although they will, no doubt, disagree with some of my views. I thank them for their generosity and for their comments. Of course, I didn't always listen to them: any problems that remain are strictly my own responsibility.

Most of all I would like to thank the hero of my study the child Rūta for the most interesting material and her mother Aurelija Kaškelevičienė who spent a lot of time recording and transcribing data.

Discussions and arguments with various colleagues have greatly stimulated my thinking: on language acquisition with Maria D. Voikova (her kindness and encouragement will be warmly remembered), Sabine Klampfer, Natalia Gagarina, Paweł Wójcik (for his cooperation in analysing Rūta's data) and other colleagues from our project, who always offered valuable comments and suggestions; on general issues of Lithuanian linguistics with Violeta Kalėdaitė (also for her time correcting my English), Simas Karaliūnas, Rūta Marcinkevičienė, Jurgita Mikelionienė, Evalda Jakaitienė, Adelė Valeckienė, Vitalija Maciejauskienė, Laima Grumadienė and many others.

I wish to place on record my deep appreciation to the Kirchliches Institut Janineum (Vienna), especially to Anna Glaser and Lonny Glaser; to my friends in Madison, Wisconsin, especially Catherine & Arthur Garst and their family, Margo McKnight, Asta Saulys, Terry Haller and many others who helped me a lot on my way to child language research.

I am particularly grateful to the Austrian Academy of Sciences and the Lithuanian State Science and Studies Foundation for their support in preparing this book.

Finally, I must acknowledge my closest friends in Kaunas and Vilnius and my family for their patience and understanding, when I was writing this book.
